Infixes

-i-

-i-

-i-

-i-

Connective element in many words formed with Greek and Latin suffixed, now often felt as part of them.

It forms no proper part of the suffix but is often the stem vowel of the initial word in the Latin compounds (genial from genius) or a modified form from it.

As such forms where very common, -i- was used merely connectively or euphonicly in some Latin compounds (uniformis) and in later words made from Latin components in French or English (centennial, editorial).

The Greek equivalent is -o- which also became an active connective in English but they now are used indifferently with elements from other languages.

-able, -ible

-able

-abile

-ig

Suffix to form adjectives from verbs.

Common suffix of adjectives typically based on verbs and generally adding the notion of capable of, allowed, worthy of, requiring, to be verb-ed.

Represents the suffix -on, -tro, -tron, Greek suffix used to form instrumental substances, meaning having to do with like electron

Cognate with the second syllables of English.

Used in formation of either Latin or native words (readable, bearable) and also with entities (objectionable, peaceable).

In Latin -abilis and -ibilis depended on the inflectional vowel of the verb, hence the variant -ible with words of obvious Latin origin.

The Latin suffix is not etymologically connected with the adjective able meaning having sufficient power or means, capable, fitting, suitable, agile, nimble but it has long been popularly associated with it which contributes to its vigor as a living suffix.

Sometimes with an active signification (suitable, capable).

Sometimes of neutral signification (durable, conformable).

It has become very elastic in meaning (playable, reliable, cadaverable).

Capable of, allowed, worthy of, requiring, to be done.

Full of, causing,

-ate*-at-ato-at*

Suffix to form verbs from Latin dead past relative atus, ata, atum: separate, desolate.

Verb suffix for Latin verbs in -are.

English commonly formed verbs from adjectives by adding a verbal ending to the adjective but then there came no difference between the adjectival and the verbal form like in dry, empty, warm.

Thus accustomed to the identity of adjectival and verbal forms of a word they simply enriched their verbs from Latin dead past-participial adjectives without changing their form such as substantiate, aggravate, and it became the custom that Latin verbs were Englished from the past dead participle stem.
